

The Most Common Myths About Car Accidents

You Have to Recognize Injuries Immediately to File a Lawsuit

Medical and legal professionals understand that it can take days or weeks for injuries to become apparent.

You Should File a Lawsuit On Your Own

Car accident cases can be intricate and nuanced. If you take your own case to court, you may be doing yourself a disservice.

You Can Work It Out On Your Own

A minor scratch might be okay to try to work out on your own, but if you're involved in anything serious, it's important to hire an attorney.

You Can Trust the Insurance Company

The typical insurance company will work to pay out as little as possible after a car accident. They are a business, after all.

Police Always Determine Fault

There are too many factors that go into more serious collisions that can complicate the determination of fault.
